9 French Place, London

The background of the page features a faint, symmetrical artwork. It depicts several figures in classical, draped clothing. On the left and right sides, there are large, reclining female figures with their arms raised. In the center, there are smaller, more upright figures, possibly cherubs or children, also with their arms raised. The entire composition is mirrored across a central vertical axis, creating a balanced, almost architectural feel. The figures are rendered in a light, sketchy style, blending into the white background.

Haoqi Xiong's work is about self-identification, not as a result but as a process developed in his everyday cultural life. The main subject of his research is the Western mythological narrative and the approach to it from the perspective of someone who didn't grow up in it. The act of painting allows the artist to reinterpret the symbols and images of the Western culture, through dynamic corrections, reflecting on his own understanding of reality and subjective feedback. Stripping and re-organising images also becomes a process of gazing back at Western culture. Through the weaving of Xiong's personal practice, the original references take on a new direction through the juxtaposition of symbols with other elements.
